

Dear Sirs: Please do not weaken current Indiana law - The Telephone Privacy Act- this law has provided one of the most effective protections against telephone "spam" if you will and allowed a more peaceful home environment especially around dinner times. To allow "existing business relationships" phrase to alter this law would severely hamper it's ability to limit the unwanted and blatantly distateful and out of control phone solicitation. I as the consumer would be subjected to this solicitation from all current business relationships and all there business partners and would have to call or write each of these businesses to opt-out of this correspondence at great inconvenience and time cost. Please consider changing the privacy laws to require all businesses to provide a free postage-paid reply card that would automatically opt-out the consumer of all such existing business relationship correspondence and sharing of information taking the burden off the and placing it on the business purposing to be advantaged by this contact and information sharing. Sincerely , Brian P. Hagedorn
